These figures are based on 108 responses to the survey. Homework is probably the hardest thing of all for schools to get right. Some households value homework highly and have the time and space to support it, while we understand that others may not. Many of our children also have busy lives out of school engaged in a myriad of sports, clubs and activities. Getting the tone of homework just right for everyone is almost impossible, so please talk to your child's teacher if you have problems or concerns. We would urge, however, that you read every day with your children, regardless of their age and stage of reading development.
