These figures are based on 162 responses to the survey. We are delighted with the encouraging, positive responses received, confirming the support and value our parents have in the school. The safety and happiness of each child is our highest priority; if these are firmly secure, successful learning takes place. Setting the right amount and quality of homework is probably the hardest thing of all for schools to get right for families. Whilst most families highly value homework and have the time and space to support it, we also understand that others may not. Many of our children lead busy lives out of school engaged in a myriad of sports, clubs and activities. Getting the tone of homework just right for everyone is almost impossible, so please talk to your child's teacher if you have problems or concerns. We would urge, however, that you read every day with your children, regardless of their age and stage of reading development.
